

THE OFFER PACKAGING SYSTEM

OFFER FORGE

Turn any skill or service into an offer people actually buy. The framework, the fill-in worksheets, the AI prompt engine, and the swipe copy — everything to package, price, and launch.

NOBODY BUYS YOUR SKILL. THEY BUY THE OFFER.

You're good at what you do. That was never the problem. The problem is the gap between "I do X" and "here's exactly what you get, what it costs, and why it's worth it." That gap is where sales die.

Most people try to close that gap with more content — another post, another discount, another explanation. It doesn't work, because content isn't the missing piece. Packaging is. A packaged offer does the selling for you: it names the outcome, prices it with confidence, stacks the value, kills the risk, and gives the buyer one obvious yes.

THE 7 PILLARS OF A FORGED OFFER

- ▶ The Name — sells the outcome, not the label
- ▶ The Promise — one concrete, believable result
- ▶ The Buyer — one person, described sharply
- ▶ The Ladder — three tiers that anchor value
- ▶ The Stack — value that dwarfs the price
- ▶ The Reversal — remove the risk of buying
- ▶ The Launch — three posts that actually sell

Work through each pillar in order. By the last page you'll have a complete offer written down — not a vague idea, a thing you can put a price on and sell this week.

THE NAME

A weak offer is named after what it is ("coaching package", "logo service"). A forged offer is named after where it takes the buyer. The name is the first thing they read and the last thing they remember — make it carry the outcome.

HOW TO FORGE IT

- ▶ Name the transformation, not the deliverable — the result, in the buyer's words.
- ▶ Keep it short, concrete, and a little bold. Say it out loud; if it's a mouthful, cut it.
- ▶ Test: could a stranger guess what they get and why it matters from the name alone?

FORGE YOURS

Deliverable I actually provide:

The outcome it creates (in their words):

My offer name:

THE PROMISE

One sentence, one result. The promise is the spine of the whole offer — every price, bonus, and post hangs off it. Vague promises ("grow your brand") don't sell. Specific, believable promises do ("a booked-out first week without running a single ad").

HOW TO FORGE IT

- ▶ Make it a concrete result the buyer can picture and measure.
- ▶ Add a timeframe or condition to make it believable, not hype.
- ▶ If you can't defend it, dial it back until you can. Trust closes; hype refunds.

FORGE YOURS

The result I create:

THE BUYER

"Everyone" buys nothing. The tighter you describe one buyer, the more the offer feels made for them — and the more it sells. You're not excluding people; you're giving one person a reason to feel seen.

HOW TO FORGE IT

- ▶ Name one person: their situation, what they've already tried, what they're afraid of.
- ▶ Write to that one person for the rest of this workbook.
- ▶ The more specific the buyer, the more obvious the price becomes.

FORGE YOURS

Who exactly this is for:

What they've already tried that failed:

What they secretly fear:

THE LADDER

One price is a coin flip — yes or no. Three prices change the question to "which one". A ladder anchors value: the top tier makes the middle look smart, the entry tier catches the hesitant. Most buyers pick the middle — so build the middle to be the obvious best value.

HOW TO FORGE IT

- ▶ Entry tier — a low-risk yes (the tripwire). Fast, small, real.
- ▶ Core tier — the one you want them to pick. Load it. Mark it best value.
- ▶ Premium tier — priced high on purpose. It anchors and it catches your best buyers.

Entry tier + price:

THE STACK

Price is only ever expensive next to unclear value. The stack makes value undeniable by naming every piece the buyer gets and what each is worth — so the total dwarfs the price before they ever see the number.

HOW TO FORGE IT

- ▶ List every component the buyer receives, even the ones you take for granted.
- ▶ Assign an honest standalone value to each. Add them up.
- ▶ Present the stacked total, then the price. The gap is your close.

THE REVERSAL

Every buyer is doing quiet math: "what if this doesn't work and I lose my money?" Risk reversal answers it before they ask. The stronger and more specific your guarantee, the faster the yes — because you've moved the risk from them to you.

HOW TO FORGE IT

- ▶ Name the exact fear and reverse it in plain language.
- ▶ Make it specific and easy to claim — vague guarantees create doubt, not trust.
- ▶ The bolder you can honestly go, the more it sells. Only promise what you'll honor.

FORGE YOURS

The buyer's biggest risk in buying:

My guarantee (specific + claimable):

THE LAUNCH

An offer nobody sees earns nothing. You don't need a funnel — you need three posts that do three jobs: call out the problem, reveal the offer, and create a reason to act now. That's a launch.

HOW TO FORGE IT

- ▶ Post 1 — the problem. Name the pain your buyer lives with. No pitch yet.
- ▶ Post 2 — the reveal. Introduce the offer as the answer. Show the stack and the promise.
- ▶ Post 3 — the push. Scarcity, deadline, or proof. Make waiting cost something.

THE AI PROMPT ENGINE

Filled the worksheets? This turns them into a finished offer in seconds. Paste the prompt below into any AI (Claude, ChatGPT, Gemini), drop in your two lines, and it assembles the whole thing using the exact framework in this system. Run it, then sharpen the output with what you wrote by hand — the machine drafts, you decide.

You are an elite offer strategist. Turn my skill into an irresistible, ready-to-sell offer.

MY SKILL/SERVICE: [describe in one line]

MY BUYER: [who it's for]

Give me:

1. Offer name (sells the outcome)
2. One-sentence promise (concrete result)
3. A 3-tier price ladder (entry / core / premium)
with what's included in each
4. A value stack (4 items + honest $ values)
5. A specific risk-reversal guarantee
6. Sales page copy: headline, subhead, 3 bullets, CTA
7. A 3-post launch sequence (problem / reveal / push)

Be specific to my business. No fluff, no corny lines.

PRO MOVE

Run it three times with three different buyers. The offer that writes itself fastest is usually the one the market wants most. Follow the pull.

FILL-IN TEMPLATES

SALES HERO (TOP OF YOUR PAGE)

HEADLINE: [Promise] – [without the thing they dread]

SUBHEAD: For [buyer] who want [result] but keep [obstacle].

BULLET 1: [What they get] so they can [micro-win]

BULLET 2: [What they get] so they can [micro-win]

BULLET 3: [What they get] so they can [micro-win]

CTA: [Action verb] + [outcome] (e.g. "Start forging")

3-POST LAUNCH

POST 1 / PROBLEM: "Most [buyers] can't [result] because [real reason]."

→ agitate the pain, no pitch.

POST 2 / REVEAL: "So I built [offer name]. Here's what you get: [stack]."

→ promise + stack + price + link.

→ make waiting cost something.

LAUNCH CHECKLIST

- ▶ Offer named after the outcome — not the deliverable
- ▶ One-sentence promise you can actually defend
- ▶ One buyer described sharply enough to feel seen
- ▶ Three-tier ladder with a loaded, obvious middle
- ▶ Value stack that dwarfs the price
- ▶ Specific, claimable guarantee that kills the risk
- ▶ Sales hero written (headline / subhead / 3 bullets / CTA)
- ▶ Three launch posts drafted and scheduled
- ▶ Payment link live — and you've told people it exists
